Take our – and the press’ – word for it: there’s music in deserts and swamps. Bogs and mountains too. It’s certainly that feeling you get when listening to Norway’s rock’n’soul power trio Orango. Music to take you away from the everyday hustle and maintain distraction from the downtown bustle. The hairy riffs and heavy damage by their guitar, bass and drums are essentially growing the roots of classic southern rock, in a time when others are stumbling in each others’ feet while looking for the next big pop hit or recreating yet another 80s pastiche.

Orango’s confident brew of good ol’ southern rock, west coast style vocal harmonies and an amazing live energy, has been fine tuned with every album, peaking with the recording of their new album, Battles. The music was recorded purely out of internal inspiration; playing for the love of music in itself, and not compromising on their true affection for the genre’s influencers. The music is dark, but not depressive. Hard-hitting and cool. It’s authentic rock, how it was conceived, crafted in a way it impacts people’s souls.

Battles is released as a deluxe box, including double vinyl, CD, giant band poster and the film “The Battles Behind Battles” (DVD), documenting the band at work on their new album.
